“Strategies to Design Materials

for Low-Carbon Footprint

Production of Energy and Fuels.”

Dr. Shyam Kattel

Dr. Kattel is an assistant professor of physics in department of physics at Florida A&M University. He holds his Ph.D. from New Mexico State University (2012). He went to Columbia University/Brookhaven National Laboratory for post-doc work before joining Florida A&M University. He is an author/coauthor of more than 60 peer reviewed articles, which are cited more than 4500 times. His research interests are materials modeling, renewable energy, and sustainability.
